

THIRD-FLOOR LOUNGE, RELIANT STADIUM

Houston

Not everything, it seems, is bigger in Texas. At least not the beer selection at Reliant Stadium—tiny is more like it. Mostly light beers. I did finally find a Corona, for a pretty reasonable six bucks a bottle. But since it's still two hours to kick-off, I didn't enjoy too many more of them before the game. Things didn't get much better after the pigskin began to fly. The Houston Texans lost in overtime to the Baltimore Ravens (ending any playoff hopes), and my new bud, slot receiver David Anderson, got knocked out for the rest of the season while having one of his best career performances. It seems that 2011 can't get here fast enough.

December 2010